ANY one possessing a collection of Confederate stamps may find a market for them. A 5-cent stamp was recently sold to a collector in Europe for $600.

THE NEWS cordially endorses the following remarks of the Florence, S. C., Times, concerning the enterprise of Savannah's business men, and commends their example to those of Pensacola:

Savannah has some business men after our own heart. It is no wonder that they have made a town of which the whole South is proud. They have recently decided that they did not have enough small industries in the city in which home products and home labor could be used, so they called a meeting or two and as a result they have now an organization with a capital stock of $150,000, which will be used to foster the establishment of such industrial enterprises as those mentioned, which are the ones that really help the community most, for they help the country by using the raw material and the city by giving employment to its citizens, and both by the circulation of money brought from outside. If every southern town and city would follow the good example of Savannah we would be the richest people on the globe soon, and the happiest, because we would have made our wealth honestly.

The Evening Paper

The relative value of morning and evening newspapers as mediums for the dissemination of the latest news, at the most acceptable hour of the day, is a vexed question that has long been a bone of contention between the publications of both classes. Those who conduct morning papers claim, with much effect, that the news of an entire day—the day before their publication—is given complete, and reaches their readers in the early morning hours between rising time and breakfast time, so that the reader can cover the entire ground and start out from home to his daily toil or business fully informed. This is quite true of the few who are not obliged by the requirements of their occupation to rise early, breakfast in more or less haste, and hurry off to their work without affording the time necessary to read and digest the news of an entire day—and that day the previous one, many of whose local happenings are already known to them.

To the larger class (including all workmen, who have not the time to read in the morning the news of the day before, and must wait until their day's work is done, when most of the news in the morning paper—read at night—is stale), the evening newspaper is a boon which only those who habitually enjoy its ministrations can fully appreciate.

That the news contained in the evening newspaper is fresher and more vividly interesting to its readers than the same news published the next day can possibly be, is a proposition that must be too plain for argument. At the hour when the evening paper goes to press—say 3 o'clock p. m.—it is 4 o'clock in New York and Washington, the great centres of news in this country, and the doings and transactions of the day are practically ended there, and the news of other places received there. The evening paper gets it all, and supplies it to its readers about 11 hours before they could obtain it from the next morning's paper, which will contain, besides the same news printed in the afternoon previous, only the record of what might have happened after business hours the previous day.

The patron of the afternoon news paper, if he receives it at his place of business, has a right to complain of the duties of the day, and can easily spare the time to look it over and see what has been happening since morning—or, rather, since the evening previous—before leaving for his home. If he is a workman, he usually takes his paper home, and after he reaches there and has supped, he can settle himself comfortably for a half hour's enjoyment of the news of the day—that day—without interference by the demands of his business or occupation.

One more consideration—last but not least, by any means—involves the right of the wife and the growing children to know what is passing in the world. Each one has her or his morning duties, which often prevent the enjoyment of the morning paper until it is time to expect the afternoon paper, with its later and latest news. When the latter comes, the housewife is through with most of her daily tasks, the children have returned from school, and all may enjoy the daily and timely visitor before the husband and father claims it for his evening's entertainment.

The morning paper may be indispensable to a few and useful to others, but the evening paper is the favorite of the busy, the dependence of the family at home, and the happy medium of conferring "the greatest good to the greatest number."

Principal school fund	41,860.25
Interest of school fund	38,059.89
Interest of semi-annual fund	1,861.50
Principal of semi-annual fund	28.42
State cultural college fund	5,257.72
Experiment station fund	3,473.77

Bonds of 1875 sinking fund	38.71
Total	$195,901.18

During the month of January $100,000 borrowed by the state in 1891, and for which notes were given under chapter 4018, acts of 1891, and the notes subsequently taken up by the common school fund principal, were paid from the general revenue fund on the day the semi-annual interest was due, January 17. One hundred and sixteen thousand six hundred dollars of bonds of the different states have been bought during the month for the common school fund principal.

The interest of the school funds, shown above to be $38,059.89, will be distributed to the several counties during the present month. Likewise the interest of the semi-annual fund, shown above to be $1,861.50, will be paid to the seminaries upon application this month. The tax certificate fund, shown above to be $14,031.25, was received for tax sale certificates during the month of January, and will be distributed in proper proportions to the state and county as early in February as the comptroller can verify the figures and make the division of amounts due to the several counties. The balance in the school fund principal will be invested as the law directs. The seven college funds are not derived from taxes and are disbursed under the several statutes applicable to them.

The state has no debts outstanding now except the outstanding bonds of 1871 and 1873, and has $18,573.91 in the general revenue fund to meet the current expenses of the state, priors and witnesses, insane asylum, blind institute, etc.

FLORIDA NEWS NOTES

The East Floridian, a new, 4 page, 8-column weekly, published at Palatka by Vickars & Hartig, is welcomed to our exchange list.

The Farmer and Fruit Grower prints a warning against inconsiderate planting of broom corn, because of present high prices, and quotes a letter from Missouri containing the following among other facts: "The world's consumption of broom is about 30,000 tons, and there can be no sudden increase, because it is used for but one purpose. This 30,000 tons is produced on about 121,000 acres, or less than sixty townships of land. Two-thirds of the broom corn of the world is grown in four counties in Illinois. To produce a ton of broom corn under fair conditions requires about three acres of land. The cost of production under the best conditions is $50 per ton, and the average selling price is $70 per ton, though it has sold as low as $30. The crop requires an immense force at harvesting, the three-hungry gang numbering not less than twenty, and the harvesting season attracts to the community as laborers or camp followers a swarm of most undesirable characters. The business requires a special outfit of tools and she's, costing $800 to $1,000, that are of little or no value for other purposes. The crop, at best, is a precarious one, that may be ruined by a few days of bad weather, and its successful growth and harvesting requires a high degree of knowledge and special skill."

An Editor's Life Saved by Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

During the early part of October, 1896, I contracted a bad cold which settled on my lungs and was neglected until I feared that consumption had appeared in an incipient state. I was constantly coughing and trying to expel something which I could not. I became alarmed and after giving the local doctor a trial bought a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and the result was immediate improvement, and after I had used three bottles my lungs were restored to their healthy state.
